About the International FAIMER Institute

The International FAIMER Institute is a two-year, part-time fellowship program for health professions faculty around the world. The curriculum is designed to teach skills that are critical to advancing health professions education as well as to develop strong professional bonds with other international health professions educators. Participation is virtual, allowing Fellows to remain at their home institutions.

An education innovation project is the focal point for the application of learning. Each participant proposes an education innovation project that is endorsed by the participant's institution in the initial application to the International FAIMER Institute. If selected as a FAIMER Fellow, the participant then works to implement the project at the institution.

The curriculum integrates knowledge, skills, and cultural sensitivity through interactive, appreciative, strengths-based approaches and is organized into the following themes:

- Project Management and Evaluation. Applies concepts and methods learned to the education innovation project.
- Education Methods. Addresses how people learn, how to assess what they have learned and provide feedback, and how to teach in large and small groups.
- Leadership and Management. Emphasizes concepts within six contexts: understanding self, understanding and leading others, understanding and leading teams, understanding and leading within the organization, building and leading regional/national communities of practice (COPs), and participating in a global COP for improving health to meet community needs.
- Research and Scholarship. Focuses on educational research design and methods (quantitative, qualitative, and mixed), integration of research and scholarship with the Fellow's innovation project, broadening the view of scholarship to align with the current missions of health professions schools, and strategic planning for the career spectrum between researcher/educationalist and scholar/practitioner.

The faculty includes a team of distinguished global experts who design, teach, and provide support for International FAIMER Institute courses. Project advisors provide mentoring and support for Fellows' innovation project design and implementation.

"FAIMER taught me to dream big and gave me the tools to translate my dream into action and the opportunity to make a global impact in health professions education."
